

Flint Hills Regional Plan

Once North America's largest continuous ecosystem, only 4% of the Tallgrass Prairie remains today, mostly in Kansas. The Flint Hills Regional Plan promotes economic development, protects natural resources, and strengthens the communities that call the Flint Hills home. In the plan, the interconnectedness of the prairie serves as a model for securing the work of the people that live in the Flint Hills, while expanding a variety of tourism opportunities — all achieved by caring for the ecosystem that nourishes them. The mounting interest in protecting the region has led to the outline of a future that is integrated, sustainable, and equitable.

STRONG CITY, KANSAS

5.6M acres
Completion 2012